The Committee on the Subject Urges That Missions Be Speedily Established in Both Islands-Article IX., Relating to Ecclesiastical Courts, Adopted by the Deputies.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21 .- The House of Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Convention this morning concurred with the Bishops in the division of the missionary jurisdiction of Kyoto, and also with the action of the Bishops in changing title I, canon 7, so as to provide that candidates for orders already clergymen of other Churches should have six months' probation before being admitted to orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The committee to nominate trustees for the General Theological Seminary named the fol-lowing, who were elected: The Rev. Herman Dyer, the Rev. Morgan Dix, the Rev. G. W Smith, the Rev. J. S. B. Hodges, the Rev. J. W. Brown, the Rev. T. G. Littell, the Rev. E. D. Cooper, W. M. Geer, the Rev. A. St. J. Champre, T. Eibridge Gerry, J. A. King, G. C. McWhorter, Elihu Chauncey, Henry Hayes, H. E. Pierreront, W. H. Lewis, George Zabriskie, G. J. Gardner, J. V. V. Olcott, Thomas Egleston, Henry Budd, the Rev. J. R. Pynchon, the Rev. Mr. Auringe, Spencer Trask and F. L. Stinson. The special committee on the new relations and increased responsibilities of the Church made its report. In Hawall, the report said, it was desirable to confer with the authorities of the English Church before taking any action. In Porto Rico it was found that the conditions were such as to warrant immediate action. There is a church and congregation in Ponce which is under the care of the Church of England, and can be transferred to the Church in the United States. It was reported that the educated people were breaking away from the Church of Rome, and it was believed that the people would take kindly to the liturgical services of the Episcopal Church. The same state of affairs was reported for Cuba, and the committee urged that a joint commission be formed to act on these matters, and that missions be speedily established in Porto Rico and Cuba. In regard to the proposed national Churches of Mexico, Brazil, Cuba, and Hayti, Courches of Mexico, Brazil, Cuba, and Hayti, these countries, the report said, already had the historic episcopate, and the Nicene rule forbade one Bishop to invade the territory of another Bishop. Such invasion would be warranted only by the gravest reasons. However, it would be warranted by the use of unscriptural terms in the communion service, the permitting and encouragement of immoral actions, or for other such reasons. It appearing that such conditions exist in these countries, it is considered lawful and proper for the Church to enter these countries for missionary purposes.

that such conditions exist in these countries, it is considered lawful and proper for the Church to enter these countries for missionary purposes.

The committee proposed resolutions, all of which were adonted. The first said it was ingredient at this time to interfere with the Church in Hawaii, and that action should be postooned until after a consultation with the authorities of the English Church in charge of the Church in Hawaii.

The next resolution was that, in regard to Porto Rico, the Board of Managers should take such action as it thought desirable. The third resolution requested the Bishop of Chicago and the Bishop of New York to call the attention of the Provisional Committee on the Maxican Church, of which they are members, to the state of affairs in that Church. The fourth resolution provided for a joint commission of three Bishops, three clergymen and three laymen to consider the whole question of the increased responsibilities of the Church on account of territory added or to be added to the United States, and to report to the Board of Managers of the Board of Missions.

An attempt was made to hear Mr. Osborne, the representative of the Hawaiian Church, on the state of the Church in Hawaii. Fifteen minutes were saked for him, and thirty minutes were spent in debating his privilege to speak, with the result that the house declined to hear him at all.

The message from the House of Bishops on Article I. of the proposed constitution, which the Deputies originally adopted and the Bishops adopted with slight amendments, was brought before the House of Deputies. The Bishops proposed to take from the American churches in Europe their representation in the convention. This was opposed by the Deputies. The Bishops also proposed to alter the method of taking the vote by the House of Deputies, which the house provided should be taken by orders and diocesses when so provided in the emaitution, and to which the Bishops wished to add the provision that the method of voting might be also directed by canon. The adopted.

Dr. Dix then submitted a report on Mr. Stetson's prop sed Article XII. of the constitution, noviding that the absence of a constitutional quorum at a seneral convention, when amendments to the constitution came up for final action, would permit the amendments to go over to the next convention. The committee disapproved of the article, and the house rejected Mr. Stetson's amendment as Article XII. The latest report of the committee on Article LX of the proposed constitution was reported by Dr. Dix as follows:

Judge Andrews took charge of the article on the part of the committee and explained its effect and scope. He said that the ultimate court of appeal provided for in paragraph 5 was intended to be the court of last resort and to reconcile or decide between conflicting opinions from provincial courts of appeal. Appeals to this court might be made on questions of decirine. Is ith or worship.

The House of Deputies in executive session to day elected as Bishops the Rev. Drs. Funston. Esail and Moreland, nominated by the Bishops testerday. The names went to the Bishops for final confirmation.

The report on Article IX. was again taken up.

The Bishors this afternoon concurred in the setting of the Deputies in adopting the report of the committee or the increased responsibilities of the Church. The Bishops asked for a conscrepe committee on the Hymnal, as they non-concurred with the action of the house in discontinuing this committee. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in discussing the section of a Missionary Bishop for the new missionary jurisdiction of Kyoto Among others, the name of the Rev. Dr. Granstall of Rishond was mentioned.

Brief Reviews of Important and Interesting Nobody who has not been there, or who has not read the Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth's book, "Through Armenia on Horseback" (E. P. Dutton & Co.), can have any idea of the difficulty of getting to Bitlis. For anybody having in hand the investigation of the Armenian nassacres it is of the utmost importance to get to Bitlia. In Bitlia there are two persons. whom the doctor does not name, but who are persons of authority on the subject of the massacres. Of course, unless they come away from Bitlis, it is necessary to go to Bitlis in order to see them. One of them holds that the massacres were unavoidable, the other is of the opinion that they were not necessary. It is impossible to shake either of these denizens of Bitlis in his stand regarding the massacres. It was the high fortune of the doctor, after numberless perils by sea and land, to see these persons and to gather their valuable opinions. When Mr. Bennett, the editor of the Herald.

was in Constantinople some time ago, he met the Sultan and told him plainly that it would be a good thing to have Dr. Hepworth go to Bitlis. The Sultan was impressed by the idea. and generously offered to provide an escort Some people may think that they would like to go to Bitlis on foot, but the doctor very properly determined to go on horseback. A horse is becoming to him, as the case was with Napoleon. He was not particularly eager for the journey. It is mountainous always and cold in the winter season round about Bitlis. The thermometer frequently drops to 20° below zero, a temperature sufficiently low to transform one's hair speedily into a sheet of ice, in case one wets it and brushes it out nicely in front of the ears, as people from New England often do, just before venturing into the open air. The ears of New England people have m than once been frozen in consequence of this simple practice. So far as mere animal comfort is concerned, it is pleasanter to stay in New York, where there is steam heat, as well as thoughtful interior decoration and open plumbing, and to write sermons for the Sunday paper, thereby counteracting the wicked influence of the overflowing "Personal" column on that day, than it is to go to Bitlis. The doctor thought of this; he could not very well do otherwise; but he considered the anxiety of the Sultan in regard to the massacres, as well as the interest of the world in general in these unhappy manifestations, and away he went, taking a pair of panniers to contain his necessary baggage and sustained by a noble pur-

There is some reason to believe that the Bultan is a monarch of nice sympathics, deeply concerned for the welfare of the Armenians It is impossible, in the brief limits of a review. to set forth the sensitive interest and tender parental concern of the Sultan in behalf of this unhappy people. He was at every pains to speed the doctor on his way to Bitlis. To Mr. Bennett he spoke sadly of the massacres, demonstrating conclusively to that editor that his heart was in the right place. If the Armenians suffered, if they were slaughtered like rabbits if their women were violated, if the brains of their children were dashed out with what appeared to be savagery on the part of the aggressors, it was at least plain to Mr. Bennett, and the doctor came speedily to be of the same opinion, that the Sultan was grieved that there hould have been any business of the kind. The pathos of the thing, the shame and sorrow of it, were understood in Constantinople, and expressed themselves in the Sultan's serious Before one goes to Bitlis on horseback it appears to be reasonable to proceed to Trebizond by sea. All the way from the Bosporus the Black Sea behaved itself angrily, doing what it could to make the doctor uncomfortable. He was superior to this annoyance. He thought of Ararat, and the Garden of Eden, and of Bitlis. He was not only the investigator, the special commissioner bent upon interviewing the two men in Bitlis, but he was the enlightened trav-eller, filled with both sacred and profane history. He knew of the ark, and felt keenly, with a scholar's perception, the importance of the association between that place of refuge and the eminence that has been named. "Far away on the northeast of Armenia," he says, be ing still in Constantinople and projecting the spectacle from his imagination merely, "rises in magnificent splendor Mount Ararat, its snow-covered summit 17,000 feet from the level of the sea, a landmark which all the people of the region, Mohammedans as well as Christians, regard with a feeling of awe. It is one of the spectacles which I have always desired to behold, for it is a centre around which so many of the events that we hold sacred revolve." The sight of Ararat was one of the compensations of the doctor for leaving his comfortable New York surroundings and occupations in order to get the accurate news from Bitlis. The Garden of Eden also lay in his way. "The guidebook." he observes, "says that the mercury often falls to 15 or 20 degrees below zero, which led me to suppose that Adam and Eve must have needed some warmer covering than fig leaves " This is a liberal minister's prerogative-his warrantable facetiousness. To one believing in the Bible story, to the great mass of simple Christian people, it is not permitted to speak flippantly of matters of Scriptural record: but sophisticated minister may, and nothing is more common than to hear the sophisticated ninister say things which shock and cause s sudden, painful shrinkage in the unsophistiated lay heart.

The doctor in Constantinople was vexed by the slowness with which opportunities were provided for him whereby he would be enabled to proceed to Bitlis. He studied the city from his hotel room in the fifth story, ate his Tur-kish meals with becoming American protest and admired the shining expanse of the Bosporus, stretching, as he specifies, from the Sea of Marmora to the Black Sea. He visited the Mosque of St. Sophia, a famous pile, commemorated by Gibbon and by Gen. Lew Wallace, to say nothing of incidental personages of lesser note. We believe that it was Lady Mary Wortley Montagu who remarked that she had seen edifices which pleased her better, and Dr. Hepworth found that St. Sophia was suffering from age; but he walked in the temple with flattering impressions, taking off his shoes and paying half a dollar for the privilege. He did not feel merely the commonplace emotions with which the traveller in ordinary must be content. This is evident from his fervid remarks. "If that magnificent building could only speak," he says. " what a story i would tell. My heart throbbed with excite ment as I wandered through its sisles." recalled with a scholar's facility the incidents of its history. The compelling storm of Mo hammed, the necessitous subordination of Constantine, these matters pervaded the doctor's mind. "What stirring times those were," he justly and forcibly says. "I recalled the incidents of the sieges and found myself getting excited while doing so. They had been buried in the deep recesses of my brain for more than twenty years; but I lighted the flickering lamp of recollection and followed them in the darkness until at last they were all collected. Blessings upon Baedeker. The doctor believed undoubtedly that his brain was giving up its hidden secrets, but we are sure that the re-aponsibility rested with Baedeker. "Mohammed II. was a determined foe and a fine strategist. He was bound to conquer the proud city though it cost him half his army." Surely this is Baedeker. Such things do not well up in memory. Gibbon never said this;

Meanwhile the cold was setting in in Ana-olia. "A second time," says the doctor, "I unpacked my panulers, having need of the things contained therein for daily use, and settled down in a fit of despair." It looked as hough the Sultan were delaying the expedition which he had promised to assist. "I shall never get at an understanding of the massa-cres." he undoubtedly thought to himself, "unless I proceed to Bitlis." The snow was piling itself thickly between Trebisond and the interior. Finally he was enabled to proceed. We do not know why he speaks of the Bosporus as the Bosphorous; possibly the printer sociated

him, but it gives the impression of phosphorus. That the doctor was not seasick: that he was satisfied to gaze with careless eyes on the town of Kerasun; that the privileges of the visiting scholar were permitted to him in divers places. as they had been in the Mosque of St. Sophia; that he found in Trebizond a gentleman who was "posted" in regard to the massacres; that he was tempted once or twice to go fishing; that his driver, Mustapha, was a most reckless expert; that he looked at the stars and dreamed of the absent; that he was unable to wash himself and got inan extremely rarefled atmosphere; that he lifted his hat under stress of a variety of sentimental impressions; that his daily gymnastic avereisa was mistaken by the Turks for a religious manifestation; that he grew thin and suffered from cold; that he did not like wine and that whisky provoked rheumatism in him, while the coffee was thick and the water caused him to break out with boils; that his Anatolian steed bore him safely over many leagues of highly dangerous ground-all this recorded by the doctor, as well as the fact that he got to Bitlis and interviewed the two residents of opposing views who honor that city by having their habitation in it. The doctor is upward of 60 years of age, and it is creditable to him, both that he has got back from Anatolia and that he has been able to write a book about his difficult and important experience. It is his privilege to boast, without offence, that he has been to Bitlis. He shares the honors with the Herald war tugboat, the Golden Rod, lately conspicuous at Santiago.

RONDO.

By CYRIL NORMAN.

A powerful novel of city life with strong love interest; the plot bizarre, fascinating. The character-drawing forceful, realistic. The book introduces characters and dramatic situations new to literature, and the climates are odd, striking and electrical. The movement of the story is spirited and kaleido-scopic. The author's vivid pen pictures are supplemented by many artistic illustrations.

Beautifully bound in cloth, gilt top, $1.60,

LIFE'S PASSIONATE GUEST. By CLARK JEWETT. A most touching story, on a subject that can never lose its terrible fascination. A convent girl is the beroine, and, aithough she died in her youth and beauty, she had seen much of life. The strangecharacters that play the leading roles in this drama of the life of Olivia Netherlands are presented clearly and vigorously. The book points an excellent moral.

A QUEEN OF SINNERS. By WINFIELD F. MOTT.

John Splendid.

The Tale of a Poor Gentleman and the Little Wars of Lorn. By NEIL MUNRO, author of "The Lost Pibroch." Cloth covers, $1.50.

Mr. Munro's new novel marks what is practically a new departure in Scots historical romance. On its appearance in serial form in England, in "Bischwood's," it attracted great attention from discriminating critics.

Mr. W. L. Alden wrote in the LNew York Times;

" * * If the author does not prove to be the legitimate successor of Stevenson I shall be surprised as well as disappointed."

Tekla. By ROBERT BARR.

Mr. Barr now ranks among the mos popular of American authors, and his many readers will welcome a new novel from him-the first in nearly two years. Tekla is a stirring romance which will take its place beside the masterpieces of Anthony Hope, Stanley Weyman, and Conan Doyle. The scene is laid in the XIV. Century, and describes among other historical incidents the hurling of a prisoner from a catapult of a besieged castle.

More Cargoes.

By W. W. JACOBS.

The success of "Many Cargoes" and "The Skipper's Wooing" last year established Mr. Jacobs's popularity with all people who enjoy a laugh. No more delightful examples of pure humor have been published in many years than those books.

Mr. Jacoba's strong sense of the ludicrous never leads him into lapses from taste and decorum. His fun is always innocent and wholesome, while the comic element in many of his stories aller-nates with a vein of homely but chival-
